"Long live litaly!" On the following evening the manifestations were renewed in front of the palace of the Due de Grammont. Letters from Ancona mention the arrival of $5,000 Austrians in that town.

There are rumars that the Pope is virtually a prisoner in Rome, he having wisked to escape to Ferrara, but having been politely informed by General Goyon that if he was not satisfied with the French protection at Rome the French Government would be happy to protect him either in France or Algeria, but did not think it for his interest that he should trust himself to Austrian bayents. will be guilty of the criminal folly of mixing in this fray. But if considerations of national the despotism of Austria, impel her to enter the lists, Russia must inevitably take the field haveness.

The rumor was all over Paris that, in addition to the Tuscan Duke running off to Bologna, Pio Nono had made a similar attempt, his object being to gain Vienna; but the French garrison had laid an embargo on him, and he is not allowed to quit the capital. and then, despite the politic, and, no doubt, onest assurances of Napoleon to Victoria England will find it impossible to stand alocs. Marshal O'Donnell, in answer to a question of Olozaga, said that he calculated for the expense of raising, equipping and maintaining the force added to the army would be for the present year about 20,000,000 reals. He then said 5. Soan is now in peace and barmony with all surging around her. Religion and humanity come general. But the indications now are that all Europe must become a battle-ground nes which marked the first fiftoen years of the century, will be re-enated or Spain is now in peace and harmony with all the nations in Europe, and there is no danger that peace will be interrupted. But a grave event has occurred in Europe, and can we remain indifferent and without preparation, although, as has been said, the intention of the government is to maintain the strictest neutrality? We demand the necessary means for causing that neutrality to be respected and for preparing for eventualities.

The Emmeror of the Prench has addressed a was homeless, friendless, and a vagary. Hamibal is pleasantly situated on the intervale of the creek and up the side of the bleff, so as to be entirely commanded by a steamboat passing up the river. It is a busting growing rillage of some 4,000 inhabitants, which the new "Hamibal and St. Joseph Railroad" has suddenly raised from local to general importance. Like most villages in the Great Western rivers, it has no wharf, and the river is now threatening to eat away a part of the bank on which railroad and steamboat freight is heaped in wild disorder. Its new consequence must, soon work a change. I look for a wharf and a great storehouse when I next land or embark here.

The Pike rounded to, and sert us sshore; the tanin backed down to within forty feet of her; the passengers got aboard the cars and were followed by their baggage, and in half an hour we were steaming up through the woody ravine te emerge on one of the largest prairies on Northern Missouri. Acroes this—or, rather, allong it—we took our course westward almost as the erow flies to St. Joseph on the Missouri, 206 miles distant, which we reached in a little more than twelve hours, or at half-past I last evening. The road was completed in hot haste last Winter, in order to profit by the 1971ke's Peak' migration this Spring; no gravet is found on its line, unless in the immediate vicinity of the Mississiph; and it was raining pitilessly for the second day nearly throughout, so that the road bed was a canseway of mortar or one, into which the passing trains pressed the ties, first on one side, then on the other, making the track as bad as track could well be. A year hence, it must be better, even with the frost just coming out of the ground; after a dry week, it will probably be quite fair; but resterday it afforded more carefuse to the mile servine of the was from Hamibal, it is intersected by the "North Missouri Railroad" from St. Lowis, which city is about one hundred miles further from St. Joseph than Hamibal is; the train from St. Louis starting it 5 a. St. Joseph is a busy, growing town of some10,000 inhabitants. It is beautifully situated on a bend of the Missouri, parily on the intervals (which the river is goaging out and carrying away), and parily on the southward slope of the bluff, which rises directly from the river bank at the north end of the town. Other towns on the Missouri may have a grander future; I doubt that any has a finer location. The river bank must be pisel or docked, or in some way fortified against the boiling current, which sets against the town site with fearful power and

The Stolar Bills.—We find the following in one of our Eastern exchanges:

It appears that the genuine sheets of notes of the Chatanooga Bank recently put in circulation, with forged signatures, were stolen by a plumber who was at work on the building occupied by the American Bank Note Company in Philadelphia. The man has been arrested, with some of the stolen metes in his possession, and $3,000 in good money—probably the result of his theft. This money is now being used in redeeming the forged notes.
